

June 2010

Dear Future First Grade Families,

Summer is upon us, with lots of extra time to play, swim, explore, relax, play some more and, of course, read. I hope that you will find many opportunities to do all these and more with your child this summer; most of all, I hope your child will see reading as a natural, enjoyable part of everyday life. The best thing you can do to help this happen is to read to your child as often as you can. Bedtime stories are great, but morning stories and mid-afternoon break stories can also be wonderful. I encourage you to make regular trips to the library or bookstore. Ask librarians for suggestions, find books you loved when you were a child, and have your child select books that appeal to him or her. Read some books aloud, have him sit next to you and look at the book while you read, give them some books to look at on their own. Let books give you and your child opportunities to laugh, to be moved, to ask questions and to revisit characters like old friends.

The attached list names some authors of many books that are good to read aloud to five, six and seven-year-olds. Some specific titles are noted; there are numerous others to be found in bookstores and libraries. Maybe you and your child will find some other treasures to share with us in September.

Dutchess Day asks all of its students to do some letter of postcard writing over the summer. You and your child should work together to write three postcards: one to me, one to Ms. Timson and one to Mr. John Cissel. We eagerly anticipate hearing about your reading and other summer fun, and we will write back!
